What do ships dream about?

Do ships have their own dreams?
Lets try to answer this question in detail.

Ships can be different.

They can be enormous...

*...but they can also be very small.
And captains on them can vary as well ...*

...from primitive,

... to advanced,

... and further up to the ideal ones.
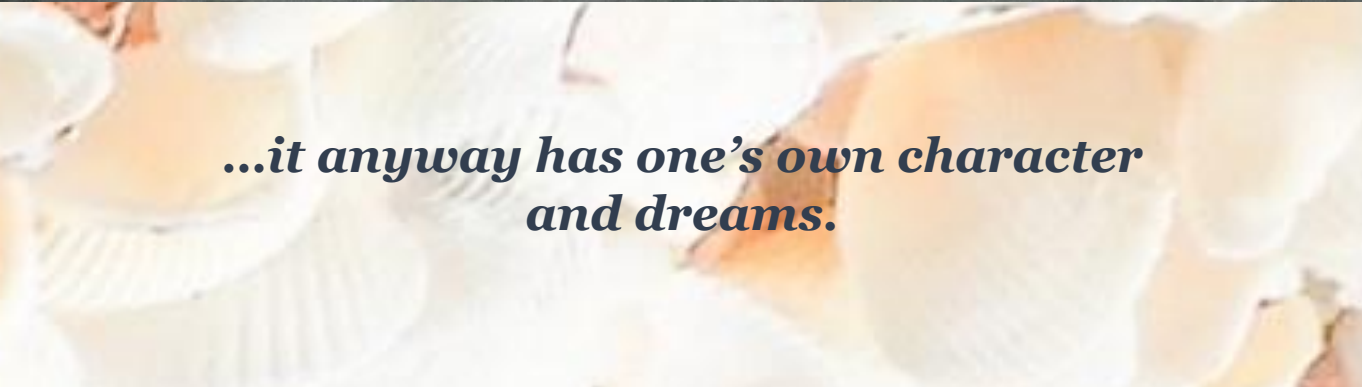

But whatever the ship could be,

...and whoever would stand at its helm,

...it anyway has one's own character and dreams.

We tried to find out more about this by asking different ships about their dreams - ...

... ships with different purposes,

... and in various parts of the world.

And here is what we found out.

Actually, if you think that ships dream of huge propellers,

... or powerful engines, then you are greatly mistaken.

Only captains dream about all of this, as well as about northern seas, distant journeys and the like.

That is why all ships in reality are afraid of captains who are too active, and even more, future skippers with artificial intelligence.

Ships dream of completely different things.

They just want a calm sea and fun passengers,

... beautiful views around,

... and interesting photo shoots aboard.

In the evenings, ships like to stand in calm harbors, relax and chat to each other.

In addition, all ships dream of retirement.

Some of them, at the end of their lifetime,
want to settle somewhere at the bottom...

...in order to breed fish and divers close by.

Others, on the contrary,
want to climb higher.

Some likes to sail to the beach and open a small shop there.

And some ships want to drop their last anchor on land in order to grow masts there.

Well, that's all we managed to learn about the dreams of ships.
